Description

Between 1932-1933, Dalí took on the artistic direction of a series of photographs made with Gyula Halász, alias Brassai (1899-1984), in which certain objects, probably of automatic origin, acquire a new conceptual and artistic dimension, grounded in the essence of the photographic image. Several of these photographs were published anonymously in 1933 in the magazine Minotaure, under the heading 'Sculptures involontaires', each with a descriptive title drawing attention to details of the work. In this case, Dalí refers to the concept of 'mental weakness', which can also be related to the article 'Concerning the Terrifying and Edible Beauty of Art Nouveau Architecture', published in the same issue of Minotaure, in which Dalí defines Art Nouveau as: 'Very accentuated decline of the reasoning faculty, extending to the verge of mental retardation'.

Observations

For this study we have taken into consideration the Estate Brassai Succession homothetic posthumous print run.
